

Richard Collier Scholarships

The Department of Electronics at the University of Kent offers a number of Richard Collier Scholarships each year for overseas fee-paying applicants starting a PhD within the Department.

The Scholarship will be an award of £2,000 per annum towards the cost of tuition fees payable mid-December each year. Overseas fee-paying PhD applicants are automatically considered for this Scholarship by a selection panel when they apply for their study programme at Kent. The award of the scholarship will be made on the basis of excellent academic references and an assessment of the proposed research topic.

The Department currently undertakes research in the broad areas of Broadband and Wireless Communications, Image Processing and Vision, Instrumentation, Control and Embedded Systems and Digital Media. Further details of the range of research opportunities within the department can be found on the Department's website.

We expect to inform candidates whether or not they have been successful within three months of receiving the PhD application. The Department of Electronics reserves the right not to allocate the awards if the selection panel identifies no suitable candidates.
