Workshop Outline

This intensive workshop provides everyone involved with either stalkers or their victims, irrespective of discipline, with a comprehensive understanding of all stalking situations. Participants who complete the training will be accredited in the administration and scoring of the Stalking Risk Profile: Guidelines for the assessment and management of stalkers* (SRP). The SRP is a structured professional judgement tool specific to risk assessment of stalkers which has become the instrument of choice throughout Europe, Australia, and in many other countries. It has been developed by a group of internationally recognised experts in the field who combine their research interest in stalking with extensive clinical practice with both stalkers and stalking victims. Participants will gain a thorough understanding of the various motivations for stalking behaviour, the different types of risk present in stalking situations, and how to identify and implement appropriate management and treatment strategies.

Day One 0900 to 1700
Day 1 will provide an overview of stalking research, the prevalence and impact of stalking, and the various motivations underlying stalking behaviour. Detailed information about recognising different types of stalkers will be provided, along with the most recent research on risk factors for the separate stalking risk domains of violence, persistence and recurrence. The day involves a combination of didactic and practical learning tasks.

Day Two 0900 to 1700
Day 2 will provide training and practice in the administration, scoring, interpretation and presentation of the SRP, including examples of writing up results and drawing up management and treatment plans. It will also provide guidance on how to assess, recognise and prioritise targets for intervention in order to reduce risk. The workshop incorporates case studies based on reference material, and a video interview by Professor Paul Mullen will be used during a practical exercise in scoring the SRP.

Completion of the workshop entitles participants to membership at www.stalkingriskprofile.com. The members’ section of the website includes SRP rating forms for free download, additional practice vignettes with completed SRPs by the authors for comparison, and secure forums for discussion of stalking cases and ongoing support from the authors in the administration of the SRP.
