James Stewart has been a journalist for 30 years, working for newspapers, periodicals, radio and TV.

This summer he will be the Broadcast Trainer on the Thomson Foundation's 12-week summer school for journalists from across the developing world.

Since 2005, he has been a freelance producer of radio and television programmes. He was previously a producer/director of factual programmes at ITV Wales and before that Editor of Current Affairs at ITV Wales.

From 1992 to 1999 he was Environment Correspondent for the BBC in Wales.

His involvement in training journalists began when he ran a BBC radio school in Bucharest, Romania in 1994. He has since run courses in several central and east European countries and in Indonesia.

In 1996 he was seconded to BBC World Service as Manager of Overseas Training.
